William Stalsberry's train, coming West yesterday morning, while coupling a gondofa loaded with railroad iron to a house car, at Fetterman, was caught about midway of his breast between the bumpers and most terribly squeezed. He was brought to his home at the foot of Market street, and medical attendance called. Considering the character of his injuries, Mr. Osborne is doing remarkably well, and strong hopes are entertained ghat no serious result will follow his severe injury.

Was All Right.—As a benighted traveler was walking homeward on one of the less frequented streets of our city, he encountered one who was rather the worse for liquor. The stranger was going so slowly, and needed so much of the walk, that the former decided to pass him. But the stranger could not understand this unceremonious way of leaving a fellow traveler behind, and he called out:

"See here, Cap'n, hold on; whar you bound for? I'm a little turned round to night, but's zall right. Cap'n, I've beer beat bad to-night, but, d—n 'em, I'l beat 'em to-morrow. Meanwhile the stranger fumbled in vai

As he said this he flourished a revolver in the direction of some imaginary posts. As the traveler appeared to be between the pistol and the posts, he felt no little uneasiness, and gladly acquiesced his belief in the skill of the stranger in hopes that he would put the weapon away. The gesticulations were continued while they walked two or three blocks, the traveler expecting to see the offensive weapon discharged at any moment; and he was very much relieved to see his companion enter a gate, remarking at the same time, "Cap'n," I stop here, but's zall right," and the traveler cheerfully said "Good morning," and hastened on his way. way.

Uniontown, Pa., May 4, 1876.

The particulars of the shooting affray are substantially as follows: William Nycum and Isaac Hutchinson, of Uniontown, Pa., quarreled some time ago about a woman of the town, and on Tuesday evening they "came together" with pistols and stones. The affray was comenced by Isaac Hutchinson and his brother James, who went to the blacksmith shop of Henry Nycum, father of William, and threw stones at the latter, one of which struck him on the leg and broke it. Nycum's father then came out of the shop, and a general stone fight ensured. Finally the elder Hutchinson (Ike) drew a revolver and fired several shots, sued. Finally the elder Hutchinson (Rec drew a revolver and fired several shots one of which took effect in the elder Nycum's right shoulder, while his sor was badly wounded in two places, one ball lodging in his thigh while another passed through the back part of his head. After falling to the ground he rolled over and fired at his assailant, but missed him upon which Hutchinson fired back with fired at his assatiant, but missed min, upon which Hutchinson fired back without effect. By this time a crowd had collected; seeing which the two Hutchinsons left the scene and escaped. The wounded men were taken to their home, and Drs. Ewing and Robinson made an examination of their injuries, and pronounced the condition of both of them to be serious. The elder Hutchinson is said to be a desperate character, while the Nycums have always been considered respectable people, although it, is asserted that William is prone to be quarrelsome whenda liquor. some when in liquor.

An exchange says the "new coin is coin and none of your slimy rag trash."

As coin, it is no doubt all right, but as a good healthy circulating medium it is a fraud. It gets into a man's pocket and he clings to it for the music its chinking traud. It gets to it for the music its chinkings make. It is mean, bungling and hard stuff, a fig plaything for babies, and not the handy and neat circulating medium such as is found in the pretty fractional currency which we all so much love. While the pockets are glutted with it; the tills of the city are void, both of it and fractional currency.

We have no doubt there is genius enough in the society to entertain an

Good Prices for Town Lors.—We un-derstand that the owners of the lots in the burned district at Fairmont are realizing fair prices for their property from per-sons wishing to build. In some instances, lots have been sold for more than the es-timated value of both lot and building previous to the fire. The indications are previous to the fire. The indications are that the burnt district will soon be occu-pied by larger and finer buildings than before.
